Guideline for Project Viva

1. Students are expected to undertake one mini project starting from first semester till third semester.
2. The student may take up the mini project in first semester based on the courses learnt in that semester and for every next semester the mini project may be based on the courses learnt in the current semester along with all the subjects learnt in earlier semesters.
3. The student may take up the project individually or in group. However, if project is done in group, each student must be given a responsibility for distinct modules.
4. Selected project/module must have relevant scope as per the marks assigned and must be carried out in the Institute.
5. Internal guide should monitor and evaluate the progress of the project on individual basis through handwritten workbook (Project Diary) maintained by students containing various project milestones with learnings and remarks from internal guide for concurrent evaluation.
6. The Project Synopsis should contain an Introduction to Project clearly stating the project scope in detail justifying enough scope for 125 marks. The project work will carry 75 marks for internal assessment and 50 marks for external assessment.

8. Students are expected to submit the soft copy of mini project report as a part of final submission.
9. The project will be assessed internally as well as externally by the examiners appointed by University. University may appoint Industry Experts as an external examiner.

2.3.1 PROBLEM SOLVING METHODOLOGIES

Sample Case Studies for MCA Department

Example: Extends and Uses (Include) relationship

Case Study: Courseware Management System

- Courses and Topics that make up a course
- Tutors who teach courses
- Course Administrators who manage the assignment of the courses to tutors
- Calendar or Course Schedule is generated as a result of the course management system
- Students who refer to the Course schedule or Calendar to decide which courses they wish to take up for study

Use Case Diagram:

- The requirements analysis task of the system is captured by the use case diagram.
- The use case model for any system consists of a set of -use cases!. Use cases represent the different ways in which a system can be used by the users. A simple way to find all the use cases of a system is to ask the question: -What the users can do using the system?!

DR. VITTHALRAO VIKHE PATIL FOUNDATION'S
DIRECTOR

Finding actors

What are the active parts in the previous list?

- Tutors
- Course administrators
- Students

Difference between tutors and students, and administrators

- The course administrator is the primary actor
- Students and tutors are secondary actors

Finding use cases

The primary business flows in the system are:

- Manage courses
- Manage course assignments

Let's have a look at these two in more detail

Managing courses

4.3] Web Publishing System: This system is designed to allow an editor to manage and communicate with a group of reviewers and authors to publish articles to a public website. The software will facilitate communication between authors, reviewers, and the editor via E-Mail. Preformatted reply forms are used in every stage of the articles' progress through the system to provide a uniform review process.

Example: Web based Bid Management System

E-bay is an auction site developed for selling motorcars. The site provides the listing of used cars, which are for sales giving the market year of manufacturer, color, minimum price, name, address, e-mail of the seller. Buyer can log on to the site and after registering himself/herself, which is free of cost bid for any car. If their bid is accepted, they have to then make payment by cash, DD, credit card within 24 hours upon which the car will be delivered to them. For their services the site charges a commission of 2% from both, the buyer and seller of each car.

2. CRC Approach for identifying classes:

- Class Responsibility Collaboration (CRC) Modeling is a method to gather and define the user requirements for an object-oriented application.
- The output of CRC Modeling is a collection of CRC cards that represent the whole or part of an application or problem domain.
- They were originally proposed by Ward Cunningham and Kent Beck – 1989 as a teaching tool, but are also popular among expert designers.
- Martin Fowler has described CRC cards as a viable alternative to UML sequence diagram to design the dynamics of object interaction and collaboration.
- CRC cards are usually created from index cards. Members of a brainstorming session will write up one CRC card for each relevant class/object of their design. The card is partitioned into three areas:
 1. on top of the card, the class name
 2. on the left, the responsibilities of the class
 3. on the right, the classes with which this class interacts or collaborate to fulfill its responsibilities.

CRC Card:

Class Name
Responsibilities	Collaborations
(what the class does)	(related objects)

Presentation/View Layer/User Interface:

The view layer consists of objects that the user interacts with and the objects who manage and control the interface. The user interface is responsible for translating the actions of the user such as selecting an item, clicking the mouse button etc. into an appropriate response. It may invoke another view layer object's methods or a business layer object's method.

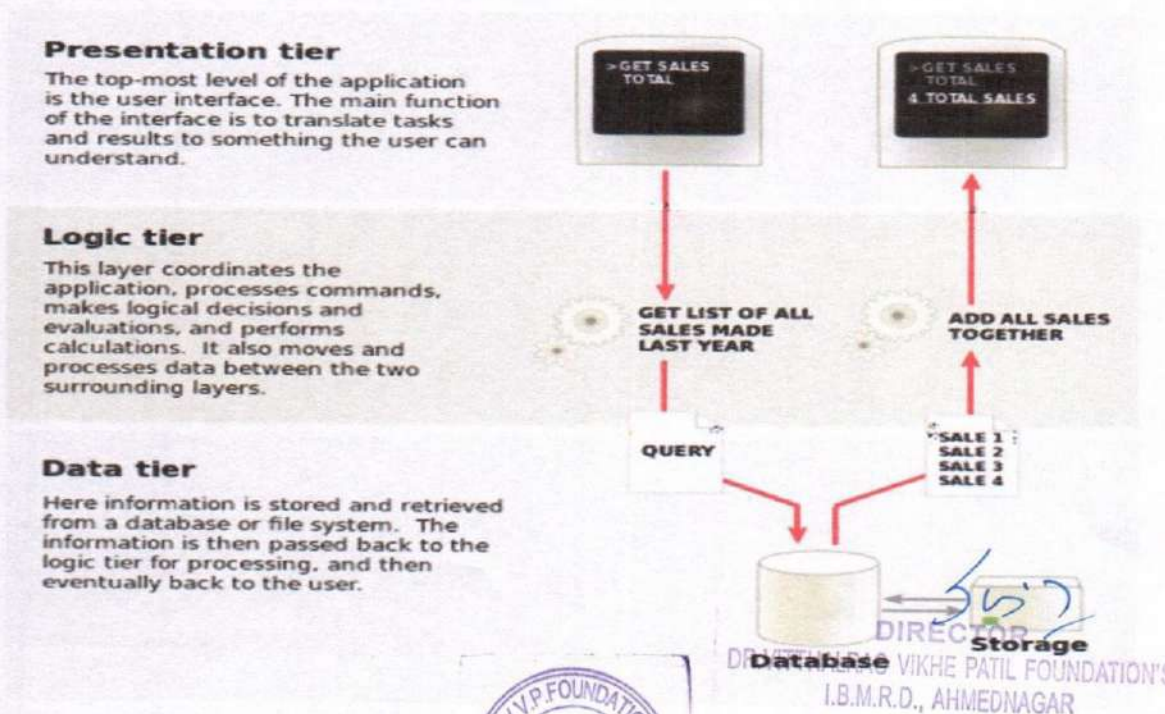

Business Logic/Business Layer:

The business layer consists of all the objects that represent the business. The objects that are involved in the business are modeled here and their interactions are identified to accomplish the business tasks.

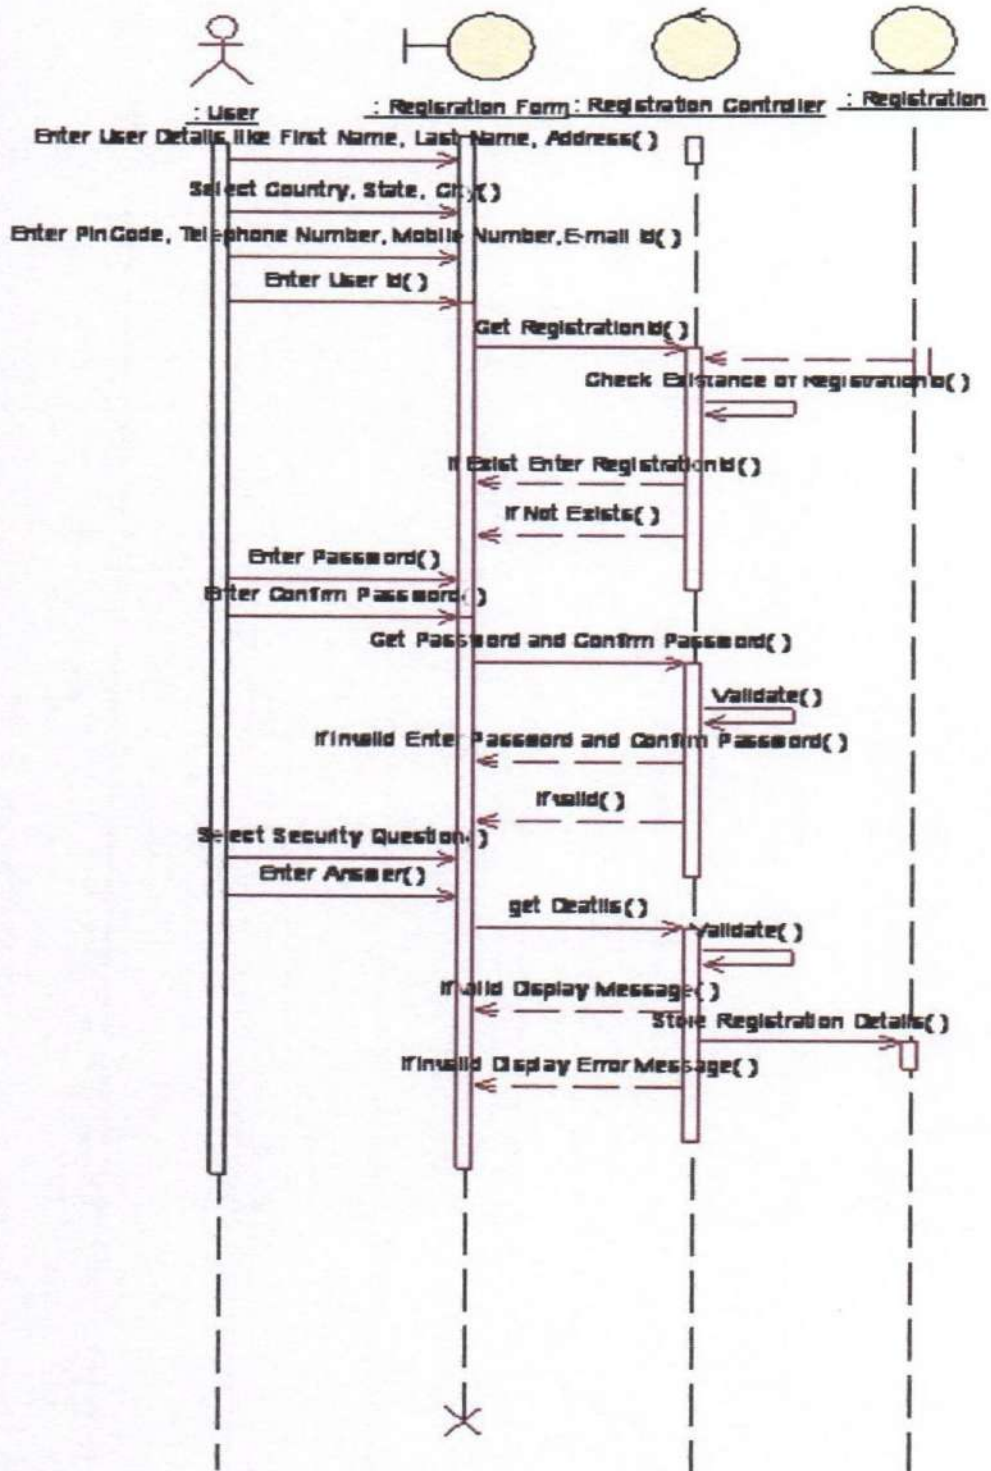

A business model captures the static and dynamic relationships among a collection of business objects. (Association, Aggregation)

Data Access/Access Layer:

The data access layer consists of objects that are responsible for communication with data store. It has two major responsibilities, translating the requests from business layer to database call and translating the results retrieved from database into business layer object.

5.4] UML Collaboration Diagram

- A collaboration diagram describes interactions among objects in terms of sequenced messages. Collaboration diagrams represent a combination of information taken from class, sequence, and use case diagrams describing both the static structure and dynamic behavior of a system.

Class roles

- Class roles describe how objects behave. Use the UML object symbol to illustrate class roles, but don't list object attributes.

Object : Class

Association roles

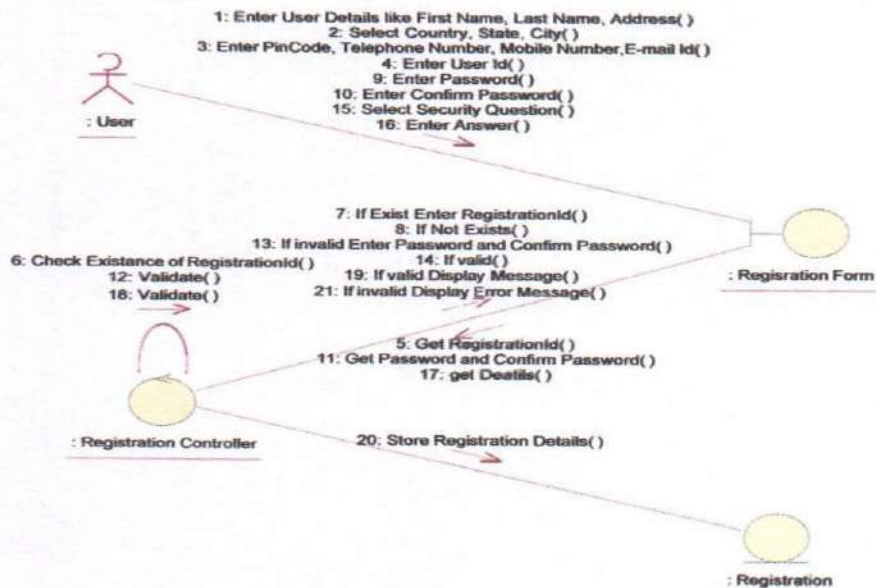

- Association roles describe how an association will behave given a particular situation. You can draw association roles using simple lines labeled with stereotypes.

<<global>>

Messages

- Unlike sequence diagrams, collaboration diagrams do not have an explicit way to denote time and instead number messages in order of execution.

5.6.1] Guidelines/Rules for Designing the User Interface:

1. Making the interface simple (Use labels, static text, check boxes (for choosing more than one option), list boxes (for long lists), spin boxes, sliders, radio buttons (align vertically), buttons (same size) etc.
2. Making the interface transparent and natural (User can anticipate what to do next by applying their knowledge)
3. Allowing user to be in control of the software
4. Make the interface consistent throughout the application
5. Intended audience, purpose, advantages of use is indicated
6. Each page indicates site ID, logo, page name, major sections, and options at current level.

Sample Case Studies for MBA Department

CASE STUDY: Subject (304 MKT) Services Marketing

CASE -I-

Target

Sushil booked a table in a restaurant for 12 people at the beginning of the Diwali period to celebrate the festive season with his family and friends. He had been a regular visitor to Moti Restaurant and had developed loyalty for this place famous for South Indian food. Most of his friends were from the south so he preferred to treat them at Moti.

Another reason for his selection was that the parton of Moti, Raj Kumar knew him well. Since he was regular visitor, he was quite confident that this dinner would be a success.

Three days before the scheduled get-together dinner Sushil spoke to Raj Kumar and asked him to increase the booking to 16. He looked busy but informed Sushil it would be quite in order and he looked forward to seeing Sushil and party later that week.

As per programme, all sushil's friends met at his residence at 7 p.m. on the appointed day and after having a cup of coffee left for Moti to be there at the scheduled time of 8.30 p.m. They were all relaxed exchanged jokes on their way and reached the restaurant at 8.20 p.m. with slight difficulty, they located parking place at three different locations for the four cars in which they were traveling.

The guests arrived at the restaurant on time and Sushil was taken aback to find that the table has been set only for 12 persons. Raj Kumar came over seeing a large group gathered around the small table laid in one corner of the dining room. Sushil reminded Raj Kumar of his earlier conversation which he had with him three day ago He asked him to recollect that the booking had been increased from 12 to 16, and suggested that it may be an oversight that he had forgotten to set the table for 16 people. Sushil then asked him to reset the table immediately for 16 people to avoid any embarrassment to him and his guests.

To Sushil's great amazement and embarrassment Raj Kumar denied that Sushil had asked for a booking for 16 people. He, rather, told Sushil that he had not phoned him at all this week to make amendments in the booking. "You must have been mistaken" said Raj Kumar.

Sushil tried to make him admit his mistake but Raj Kumar was too rigid and continued to take a stand that he had not received any such call and that the booking was for 12 people only. The restaurant was full and sushil asked Raj Kumar to resolve the matter as his guests had been standing for more than ten minutes. Raj Kumar expressed his helplessness and said there was nothing he could do at the moment.

At such time, Sushil knew that there was nowhere else they could go at this time. Sushil and his wife along with another couple opted to wait and let 12 members of the group seat themselves. It was after a long wait that they could be accommodated with the group. This could happen only when the guests sitting next to them left after their meal.

All of them settled for the dinner but discussions mostly centered around the service provided by the restaurant. At the end of the dinner Sushil checked the bill and did not leave any tip for waiters. Before leaving the restaurant Sushil met Raj Kumar in private and explained him that he would not be visiting him again. Raj Kumar admitted that he may have been hasty but thought Sushil was being unreasonable as it was his busiest evening and he should make allowances.

Sushil never visited the restaurant again and his friends too stayed away. They narrated this incident to many people.

Questions for Discussion

What were the pitfalls in the service delivery?

How would you react to the behavior of Raj Kumar?

Had you been Raj Kumar, what could you have done to turn this problem into a situation which would have won the customers forever?

What are the problems and issues which cause such situations and such behavior of service providers?

Cross-Selling Professional Services into the Philippines

A professional firm specializing in pension fund audits seeks to extend the firm's relationships with existing clients in the Philippines by offering consulting services. But the first attempt at cross selling is a flop. What has gone wrong and why?

Juan Miguel Duavit, a new partner and co-director in the-Manila office of Bouleau & Huntley, pondered over what had gone wrong earlier in the day at his meeting 'with National Metals

Corporation, a major metals manufacturer, where his carefully prepared consulting presentation had been greeted by a bewildered silence.

THE FIRM

Duavit, 42, had joined Bouleau & Huntley three months earlier, in March 2004. Bouleau & Huntley was a multinational corporation with headquarters in New York, that specialized in pension funds auditing and human resources management. Its Manila office had been serving clients in the Philippines for the past 15 years. The firm was founded in 1923 by Robert Bouleau, a New York actuary, and William Huntley, insurance executive, who had noted that American corporations were rapidly creating new pension funds for their executives. The two men recognized that this trend would create vast new opportunities for a professional firm that could advise firms properly and audit their plans every year, as required by the law. Within ten years, Bouleau & Huntley had become the leader of a new profession, with a well-established presence in the United States. Subsequently, it began opening offices overseas. By 2004, Bouleau & Huntley was a worldwide firm with 42 offices, 325 partners, and revenues in excess of US$950 million. The firm continued to flourish with its combination of high-quality professionalism and aggressive marketing. New divisions had been launched in four areas closely related to pension funds: executive compensation, personnel management, insurance consulting, and reinsurance consulting.

Expansion into the Philippines

The Philippines had a Retirement Act, the Republic Act No. 764.1, which required that an employee facing compulsory retirement at 65 must receive from his employer a retirement benefit based on the final monthly salary and the number of years worked with the firm. Most companies turned to the private insurance industry for pension schemes. Having repeatedly been sought out by various prestigious clients in the Philippines, Bouleau & Huntley opened its Manila office in 1989. By 2004, the firm had 11 partners and 120 employees in the Philippines, operating from its headquarters in Metro Manila, with small satellite offices in Cebu and Luzon. Total revenues in the Philippines were 545 million pesos (approximately US$10 million). The firm's mission, as stated by its director, Jose Arellano, was "to serve large international companies active in the Philippines and to develop a national clientele among leading Filipino companies." In addition, the Manila office had been assigned the task of experimenting with expansion into other types of professional activities that could be adopted worldwide throughout Bouleau & Huntley.

Duavit Changes Jobs

Juan Miguel Duavit graduated from the prestigious University of Philippines(UP). After a two-year stint With Sun Corporation as a brand manager, he spent two years in the United States, obtaining an MBA from the Wharton Scpool. On returning to the Philippines, he joined the glass division of Glasscore, holding several jobs in marketing and strategic planning over a four-year period. Through a UP classmate, he was recruited by the Manila office of Ascent Strategic Consultants (ASC), where he enjoyed a very successful career for 12 years, with the last seven as a partner. However, over time, he began to' feel restless. His personal interest in the "soft" side of consulting problems, dealing with people rather than profits and efficiency alone, was not shared by the leadership in ASC. It was through Jose Arellano, one of his neighbors in the plush Sangundistrict, that Duavit first became familiar with Bouleau& Huntley. Both men served on the board of the private school attended by their children and had come to know each other socially. Over dinner one evening, Arellano suggested that his friend think seriously about joining Bouleau& Huntley. "Our strategy committee in New York is constantly pushing me to develop new lines of professional activity," he told Duavit. "What you have done with ASC is of real interest to us, and I am sure that you would enjoy working with our personnel management and' compensation partners." Warming to his theme, Arellano continued: We've been hugely successful in our major activity of pension fund auditing. Worldwide, we have 350 Fortune 500 companies as our steady clients. Historically, it's been a very profitable business, enjoying steady growth as the pension funds themselves grow in size. However, this has attracted new competition and the business is becoming more price sensitive than in the past. In addition, it is heavily influenced either positively or negatively by regulatory and national political decisions totally beyond our control. . In the Philippines, we're doing reasonably well, but we could certainly use additional revenues, if only to enhance our average revenue per partner and, of course our bonuses. We should enter new professional areas, such as the strategy and general management consulting that you know so well.

The synergies with our own main line of activity are obvious. With someone like you on board, and with the team we will help you build up, it should be possible to generate additional cash flow from existing clients, as well as gain new clients for the firm.

Further conversations during the subsequent months explored these opportunities and confirmed their mutual interest. Both men agreed that a vast potential existed in the Philippine among leading Filipino companies, as well as with the Asian affiliates of multinational groups headquartered in Manila. Arellano made several long-distance calls and exchanged confidential faxes with the managing director and most senior partners of the firm about hiring Duavit on a quasi-equal basis to himself, in recognition of his extensive experience and in anticipation of expected benefits. Finally, over lunch at the Manila Hotel one day, Arellano offered Duavit an immediate directorship, a new departure for Bouleau & Huntley, plus a compensation package so generous that it was "impossible to refuse." Not only would Duavit receive a fixed compensation equal to his current total remuneration, but there was a provision for a large bonus (up to 30 percent of his salary) on incremental business from existing clients and up to 50 percent for the successful acquisition of new clients.

Working at Bouleau & Huntley

So Duavit joined the Manila office of Bouleau & Huntley in March 2004. His new colleagues welcomed him warmly, but he was surprised to find them somewhat reticent about discussing their own clients. Duavit ascribed this to professional respect for confidentiality. He set to work, following up several leads of his own and within three months had brought in two new consulting clients. He was also involved in arranging for Bouleau & Huntley to audit a supplementary pension fund that one of his former employers was creating for its senior executives. He had started building up a team of four younger consultants, including one bright young man who, after spending two years in Bouleau & Huntley's compensation practice, had decided to move on to strategic work. Duavit was already looking forward to the day when he could propose that this enthusiastic consultant should become the first junior partner of the new-Manila practice. Despite these early successes, he was still concerned by the reserved attitude among his colleagues. One day when he was lunching with three of them, he answered their questions about his work at ASC. Describing a project that he had directed the previous year to reorganize a major oil company, he encountered a mixture of disbelief and incomprehension. "Do you mean that you and your colleagues actually restructured this enormous company last year?" one of them asked. "Yes," Duavit replied. We helped them simplify their structure, reduce the number of levels from 11 to 6 and even helped them relocate 482 people, saving about 644 million peso (US$11.6 million) in overhead costs. Then we streamlined their management information and planning system. Total fees amounted to 81 million peso (US$1.5 million) for 15 months of continued work by a team that ranged in size from four to seven consultants. "Hey, what happened to their pension funds?" interjected another of his colleagues. "Nothing, I believe," responded Duavit, slightly surprised. "Being nationalized, they only had the usual social security employee benefits. Do you want an introduction to their CEO to sell him one of your schemes?" "No, I was just curious," the other replied. "You might try to get the name of the guy who set up their last pension fund," another actuary partner suggested. Duavit could see that his kind of work was not their "cup of tea," and he found it just as hard to understand the arcane workings of the assignments in which his actuarial colleagues were involved. He also marveled at the enormous fee the firm charged for what seemed to him was tedious and repetitious work. He was also deeply impressed by two things: their extensive use of "precooked" computer programs that seemed to be doing all the work, and the ease with which they obtained repeat business 0 year after year without any need for the costly and time-consuming "developmental" work required in his own type of consulting. All they did was send a letter of renewal at the end of each year, with a prepared space for the : company to sign. It seemed so easy! One Friday afternoon, just before 5 p.m., Duavit was beginning to check a 50-page report due at the client's the following Monday an~ he still had to write a proposal before goirig home for the weekend. Two of his partner colleagues poked their heads in at his open doorway. They were carrying raincoats and umbrellas and were evidently leaving for h ome. Quickly sizing up the situation, one of them, Victor Vasquez, remarked cheerily:

"My dear pare [the Filipino equivalent of "pal" or "chap"], you're obviously in the wrong business! You should have gotten an actuarial degree like us, instead of wasting your time at Wharton! See you on Monday! Cheers!"

Two weeks later, Duavit felt he was finally beginning to make progress. After much lobbying, Vasquez had agreed to open the door to his largest client, National Metals Corporation, a company involved in refining and marketing copper, chromium, and nickel. Since Duavit had led an ASC consulting team for Amix in Indonesia several years earlier, he knew the metals business and was certain. that he could do something beneficial for Vasquez's client. At National Metals Corporation's main administrative offices in Makati City, Vasquez led Duavit along a series of tortuous corridors to the office of Carlos Aseniero. Duavit was a bit surprised to find that his colleague's principal contact was a harassed-looking little man in a cluttered office. Aseniero greeted them politely and cleared several files off the chairs so that the two visitors could sit down. After the introductions were made and Vasquez had confirmed that the audit report would be ready on the promised date, Duavit launched into his presentation. He delivered a thorough but succinct analysis of five years of published figures, complete with diagrams he had prepared that very morning, comparing overall profitability, days of inventory, and asset rotation for National Metals Corporation and three of its Asian competitors. Duavit concluded what he considered to be a stimulating. IS-minute presentation by inviting Aseniero to' make use of Bouleau& Huntley's strategic consulting services to help National Metals Corporation carve "out a market share and improve profitability. Expecting an interested response; Duavit was amazed to be greeted by complete silence in the room. Not only Aseniero but also Vasquez appeared somewhat they had just heard. Seeking to regain the initiative,

Duavit asked Aseniero, "Do you think that your boss would be interested in pursuing these issues further?" Looking slightly ill at ease, the other replied: You have to understand that my office reports to the assistant finance director, reflecting the immense amounts of money the company is investing in this pension fund. The fund is also used as collateral for some of the company's borrowings. I don't believe that my boss, Mr. Perez, participates in strategy discussions with our board. Of course, I could ask him to arrange an appointment with our director general [CEO], but I'm told he's a very busy man. "Thank you, Mr. Aseniero," Vasquez said, rising to his feet and holding out his hand. "My colleague and I really appreciate your willingness to take time out of your busy schedule." Duavit also shook hands with Aseniero and thanked him but found it difficult to hide his disappointment. Then, the two partners left the office and retraced their way back to the reception area. "What happened?" Duavit asked as the two of them climbed back into Vasquez's large new BMW. "I thought that I gave him a very convincing line. Wasn't he interested? Or did he simply not understand?" Vasquez eased the BMW out of the parking lot and smiled wryly. "I think you scared him rather than impressed him, my friend. And you scared me, too. At one point, when you proposed raising the ante to the level of his superior, I thought that I was going to lose him as a client.. Never again!" Duavit remained silent for a long time. It was becoming clear to him that the actuarial partners appeared to be more interested in using him and his work to bring in new clients for their own practice, rather than the other way around. Yet, he liked what Jose Arellano had told him about Bouleau & Huntley's combination of professionalism and aggressive marketing. Obviously, a lot still needed to be done before the synergies he and Arellano had dreamed about could be achieved. "Well, I won't give up that easily!" Duavit said eventually, as Vasquez accelerated onto Ayala Avenue. "Victor, let's think this experience through and decide, together with our other partners, what we should do differently if we want to succeed as a team. Have you ever heard of cross-selling?". "No, as a matter of fact, I have not" Vasquez answered; "but Jose has given me the task of setting up the agenda for our yearly Manila Partners meeting in Makati City next month. I still have nothing for the morning of the third day. How much time do you need?"
